

Female Physician — A Pennsylvania paper, called "the Perry Forrester, makes honorable mention 'of a "Doctress woman," who some time ago took up her residence in the western part of that county, but has lately changed her head quarters to a farm about six miles from Landisburgh. On a moderate calculation, it is supposed that she has within the last two weeks, been visited by, and has now under her care, about one thousand patients. At her residence she has in many respects adopted new regulations. It is now discovered that she eats and drinks as other people do, though she has never been known to sleep; at night, she boils her medicines and issues it out to her anxious patients by the gallon, half gallon, &c. during the day. A list of all those who partake of her precious draughts, is regularly kept, which expedient will no doubt lessen her practice, as the people have a natural aversion to doctors' bills.
